Main focus of his work

Consequences of societal change

Diversity in cultural and religious positions, individualism, mobility and instability characterize our current society.

Education

Education was pivotal to solve the problems emerging from societal change. Numerous schools, seminars and other educational institutions were inaugurated during the active work time of Hans Joachim Schwager.

According to him, education is not limited to professional knowledge, but includes political, religious and historical aspects as well as the reasoning with the afflicted persons about their condition.

Inclusion and Participation

Long before antidiscrimination legislation with respect to persons with disabilities emerged in Germany, Hans Joachim Schwager engaged in supporting the inclusion, participation and autonomous decisions of persons with multiple handicaps. He acknowledged the social background of deficiencies and the necessity of society to develop tools overcoming barriers: To participate, shape and get involved in life is a common aim of all persons, independent of their impairments. This was his credo.

Hans Joachim Schwager was concerned with the development of structures to introduce "informed consent" in patient care. Anticipating misunderstanding and opposition among staff, he initiated discussions, lectures and panels thus acting as a role model for creating consent.

Clinical Ethics

International Co-operation

His responsibility for the field of epilepsy in Bethel and the intention to implement an epilepsy surgery program in Bethel led to an intensive co-operation with the Cleveland Clinic Foundation in Ohio, USA. Soon, ethical questions with respect to this (elective) brain surgery broadened the view on treatment decisions in general; experts were included in the process of implementing clinical ethics. Prof. Kanoti and Prof. Agich from Cleveland, Prof. Reiter-Theil from Basel and Prof. Sass from Bochum complemented the expert group.

The Clinical Ethics Program and Committee

Clinical ethics developed as a common practice internationally under changing (societal) conditions, which focused on treatment decisions and connected ethical dilemmas. The autonomy and the respect for the personal choices of the patient were the starting points for ethics. Paternalism in patient care was seen as outdated, and shared deliberation was seen as a prerequisite for consent. Clinical ethics was justified through this process of common deliberation about patient's preferences and hospital's values.

In Bielefeld, Hans Joachim Schwager started the practice of sound communication and ethical deliberation in clinical practice. Since then patients and surrogates are regularly engaged in the process of shared discussion with health professionals.

Forum ICCEC

The International Conference on Clinical Ethics and Consultation was initiated in 2000 out of a conversation with H.J. Schwager with the aims to bridge the gap between academic and clinical ethics (CE) and to establish an ongoing international discussion about concepts, practise and evaluation of the field.
